The notion of revelation and revelation-ability in mysticism.

"Of what avail or necessity this poor thing called (प्रमाण वराकः) evidence of testimony can be, in the parlance of self evident gnosis."
(Abhinav guptacharya)

"What ever conduces to self realisation is the means -albeit without conflicting the vedic dictum we have proclaimed this hundreds of times"
(Sureshwaracharya)

Whatever lies beyond the domain of reasoning must come from a source either much more sophisticated and advanced or the perfect being .

There have been two variants of authenticity the former from a mystic of Saivite monism in which Abhinavagupta has mocked conventional testimony of evidence and the latter Sureshwaracharya asserting the validity as subservient to the revelations .

Agamic including the ones based on the Patanjali school of thought have direct perceptions ,predication,and the scriptural authority. The third one has been interpreted differently by various thinker and construed to vindicate their respective school of thought . One must know what from the horses mouth and what cannot be known otherwise . If there is no more means of examining the validity then we are left with only two alternatives- the divine theory that what ever comes from an apt authority is the testimony of evidence. Some purist define Nirdustah Shabdah aptam . A flaw less depiction is apt or authentic . The flaw can be of various types - aberrant theme or expression or even faulty grammar according to a school of grammarian purists . The theory of -supra mundane offenbarung asserts that a perfect being or an enlightened being's dictum is always flawless and needs no critical analysis from the unenlightened or imperfect lot . Empiricists on the other hand would like to get the authenticity and consistency with their own conditioned and limited cognitive faculties and would accept only if the revelations and revelationability is proven as flawless .

Agama is in fact an instrument of propagating the word transcendent experience through the three upayas . Thus the initiate is referred to as shishu or a child . The spiritual wisdom and energy has to be induced into a neophyte through a trance called Sambhav. The trance that follows after guru has transferred his spiritual energy into a novice who has dispersed all thoughts and benumbed the cognitive faculty-is called Sambhav. [lit born out of quietude] The mode of revelation in the agamas is based on the commitment that Parameshwar in his exoteric as well esoteric form is the origin of all tantric and agamic wisdom .Exoteric form: the supreme being is the god with five faces and ten hands . These are the sources of fivefold agamas called panch srotah or streams and ten vah or currents. This is the esoteric personification . In most of the cases word and meaning are considered as in unison so whatever pertains or conduces to the non duality of word i.e. the depiction and the propound is an esoteric depiction . In many tantra even books are worshipful entities . They are the embodiments of the exoteric entity depicted in them . So shiva as Tantrik rendering of the five rivers resplendent with water having a common source ,the goddess of speech, thus divides five fold which manifest as five rivers in the ethereal parlance .[rik]. The ten sources have been described as the ten Rudras [unlike eleven Rudra of the vedas and puranas] . All these came to be elaborated in the form of vast gamut of agamic canons comprising 64 tantra innumerable agamas with myriad knacks of attaining, retaining and propagating the lineage of mystic gnosis of ones own shivahood .

The tradition of dialectics conducive to subjective experience Nirvikalpe tu vakyarthe shabdo bodho nahi Kshama -this is a popular adage among the monists . What dawns as a subjective word transcendent experience cannot be verbally depicted . The very process of depiction leads the aspirant away from his essential nature .The the notion of प्रमाणम् is way different from the conventional one where the subservience to the discursive or hermeneutical canons is inevitable

One budhist. Scholar has mused - यस्यप्रमाणं न भवेत्प्रमाणं कस्तस्य कुर्यात् वचनप्रमाणम्

How can person's dictum be authentic if his evidence of testimony is not authentic .

The quest for self awareness is beset with difficulties and often brings the aspirant to the crossroads to check the level of emancipation actually achieved. In doing so it tarnishes all the notions of duality that one has been programmed to believe in. Now theoretically it sounds easy but such shattering of ego can be a very painful and sometimes a dreadful experience. It reduces one of nothing before reinstalling the self. It gives an insight in one's un-agency and one feels like a character from a video game whose control lies with the player!

The desire to become the player rather than the plaything is the one which takes root in the heart of an aspirant. As one starts walking the path, strong sense of doubt and fear may arise as it questions the very existence of the notions by which one has lived till now. Many a times aspirants may simply give up the path and go back to their comfort zones and what makes sense to them. Though it is evident that they are leaving their path and also a part of themselves behind, they try to merge with the world. Superficially it is easily achieved as nothing matters to them anymore but the hollowness and the chasm created in their hearts keeps on growing. The loss trickles from their eyes, a memory sends a shiver down their spine and they feel they are betraying themselves. The worldly quagmire tries to silence these feelings but they keep knocking louder and louder till one cannot help but open the door. And once it is opened, Lo behold There is the Mother waiting with her arms open to embrace her child!

Explaining the notion we begin with the insightful editorial by our Guru Maharaj, Swami Paranand Tirth ji on the journey on self awareness and the possibility of attaining one's Shiva hood. "The spiritual wisdom and energy has to be induced into a neophyte through a trance called Sambhav. The trance that follows after gurus has transferred his spiritual energy into a novice who has dispersed all thoughts and benumbed the cognitive faculty-is called Sambhav. [lit born out of quietude] "writes Swamiji.

Next we have translation and exposition of 2nd verse of 'Mahakal Stotram', The verse explains the significance of the iconographic features of Mahakal to cut asunder all dualistic notions of self and the world..Following this we have an erudite article titled 'त्रैपुरसिद्धांतः' 'The principle of Tripura', by Dr Arti Sharma. which traces the evolution of the concept of Tripura from Vedas, Puranas and Agamas. She further discusses the esoteric and symbolic importance of the number three and various forms and ways in which she is adored. Coming next we have a write-up by Bhoomi Sati on 'Meditation and Brain Waves' . during meditation, beta waves (12–30 Hz), which are generally associated with active thought and problem-solving, tend to diminish leading an individual to to more relaxed and higher mental states, hence it proves beneficial. Next we have a brief write-up on 'The Science of Shakt by Varni Paratpar Swarup quoting the verses from 'Shakti Vijnana' and their detailed exposition.

The ponderings of Suva, an Indian artist based in Finland titled 'Text-Body' along with creative philosophical excerpts from his blog provide an interesting and engaging insight in a creative mind which problematizes the issues of identity and individuality. Next up there is translation and exposition on 13th Karika from Ishwar Pratibhijna Karika by Utpaladeva from the YTA study circle. A brief insight into the online classes conducted by YTA is next which is followed by two soulful poems by Rashneek Kher and Ambika Talwar titled ''Mother O Mother' and 'Burning Burning Reach for the Gold' both yearning for the glimpse of the Mother!

A hymn to Buddhist Mahakal -the god of terror and fury

MAHAKALA STOTRAM

Mahakal the deity of wrath and fury part 2

द्विभुजैकमुखं वीरं कपालकृतशेखरम्
व्याघ्रचर्मकटीवेष्टं शतार्धमुण्डमालिनम्॥ २॥

He is a gallant entity who has two arms one face and wears a necklace of human skulls on his head. Wearing a skirt made from tiger hide around his waist he also wears a necklace of fifty human heads.

Severed head denotes the finite and conditioned entity. This has to be cut asunder with the sword of metaphysical wisdom . The apar pramata or in Buddhist lingo असम्यक्संबुद्धः un enlightened being if not dissociated would emphasise his erroneous world view and the reciprocations of its misgiving. The intuitive insight into the deep philosophical mystery and the readiness to discard all that is aberrant and fallacious and the ability to assert the truth doesn't dent one from practice and adherence to some particular commitment. The benevolence of Mahakal dawns upon an aspirant in the form of wrath leading to assertive depiction of one's righteous commitment.

There are many forms of Mahakal out of which this single faced and two handed one is presumably the basic one the principle of wrath or the fury which motivates all and sundry in the universal phenomena and has been named as Bheesanam Bhadraam the gentle and still furious in his Narasimha aspect . His fury makes the winds blow, his wrath compels the sun to shine, death kills mortals afraid of his wrath says the upanisad. Aarbhati is a special gesture in ancient dramaturgy and one of the Vrttis discussed in Indian Aesthetics. This depicts fury and wrath, gallantry and bravado in an exaggerated manner to enhance its impact manifold. Here this vritti is used to dispel unbecoming factions of the universal phenomena which have to be subjugated so that righteousness may prevail .

The concluding verse of this hymn says that if a man recites this hymn with due devotion he is delivered from all fears and danger coming from the enemies is annulled. An aspirant after emancipation does not have to protect himself physically, the supreme wisdom personified as Mahakala comes for his protection and safeguard . There is another dictum in the upanisads that the absolute principle manifests as the god of fury scares every one except the enlightened soul. One who has attained the bliss of his essential nature dreads no one hence granting the state of fearlessness in other words signifies his leading a soul to enlightenment. He can also lead an aspirant to the deathless state of spiritual enlightenment where the liberated soul is scared of no one and dreads no one . There is an aphorism in the yoga compendium of Patanjali that if a person meditated upon the minuscule time fraction he can attain a type of intuitive insight called vivekajanyam jnanam. This principle could have been adopted and developed in the Indo-Tibetan system of mysticism as the means to enlightened.

There are three main Acharas or conducts in the Indian school of agamas -Divya ,Pashu and Veera. The first one is based on the principle of -devo bhuta yajet devam . Owing to the innate unity of the worshipper and the worshipful the aspirant through his or her attire, looks attitude or composure must retain a divine air and conduct which is literally called - the conduct of the divine ones. Pashubhava is popular among pashupatas who maintain that an empirical soul is bounded and is liberated by the lord of the pashu or beasts i.e. Pashupati . Before the immense wisdom of the omniscient shiva an individual soul is merely a pashu or a beast ,who is totally dependent on his munificence for his emancipation. This attitude is pashu Bhava which is very useful when it comes to seek favours of the deity and the preceptor since it conduces to highest degree of submission and docility. Veerachara is highly spoken of in the leftist agamas or vamchara . The conduct of a gallant one, again is in accordance to the description of worshipful deity.

Mahakal is the absolute time who outlasts everything and predates everything . The order of succession or Khama as it is called in the agamic philosophy prevails even the post annihilatory phase of dissolution in a dormant form though . Kalo na Yatah vayamev yatah –(the kala goes nowhere, we come to end but not kala). This is about the relative kala not to speak of mahakala who generates even the three dimensions of relative time . His annihilatory fury and the wrath that motivates each and every phenomena of the universe is personified and felicitated in this hymn. Veerachara and other acharas must blend with bhava or emotional rapport with the deity. Master and slave, son and father , friends, mother and child so on and so forth comprise the ways an aspirant or devotee can relate himself to the aspect of god one worships. Their conflict is called vyabhichari , their being conducive is called sahachari. In the context of Mahakal the bhava is veer so rasas and their auxiliary bhava which conduce to this are -raudra[furious] veebhatsa [disgust] and bhayanak [Fearful and awe inspiring] . Various skull ornaments, attire, dagger and skull full of blood is represented to generate such effects which blend with the nature and temperament of the deity being adored . Our lord Mahakala is draped in a tiger hide. In Hindu and vajrayana semiotics a tiger denotes pride or vanity . So the waist cloth made from tiger hide means Mahakal and therefore his devotees have completely subjugated their lower ego vitathabhinivesh [a sense of vanity based on fallacious assumptions specially about oneself] which leads to a complete unison with the supreme ego of the universal self. This unison must precede a total annihilation of the individual ego. The small experiment in the tantrik literature is nothing else but the contracted form of the all pervasive power of consciousness, conditioned in maya or the delusion.

Fifty syllables of sanskrit alphabet are the abbreviated form of Aham the essential self . It begins with the first letter A and ends at H both put together denote aham or purnahanta or the absolute self . A pell mell divergence of the letters and their various combinations delude an aspirant about his essential nature and their convergence into the notion of identification with the universal self signifies the arcane ornamentation of fifty skulls.

Some maintain that these are in fact actually the severed heads tied from their hair and with fresh blood dripping from them . In any way the analogy is regarding the stoppage of dissipation of absolute consciousness though the divergence of the alphabet and restraining their further divergence by wearing them as a garaland. Kapal or skull worn as a head gear is the continuous memory of inevitability of death and deprivation where as the garland of the letters as Arthur Avalon calls it is an instrument of disrupting the unruly ouflux of chitshakti and orientating vak towards the incessant vimarsh or gnosis or one's essential nature .

The principle of Tripura

त्रैपुरसिद्धांतः

Dr. Arti Sharma

In the Rigveda the power of consciousness of the absolute Brahman has been depicted as consolidate bliss or Anandam in Aditi suktam it has been propounded that the arcane name of this exponent of perpetuated bliss and consciousness is Aditi. This divine mother has been conceptualised as the magna mater of all sentient beings like Asuras, demigod, humans, ancestors etc.

She is further described as Mother Earth, Savitri, Gayatri, Saraswati etc. Her effulgent divine offsprings are mentioned in the revelations as Adityas whereas those with taints of darkness are called Daityas or demons. Therefore, devas or Adityas as opponents of Daityas and devas or demigods as opponents of asuras or demons has been described in the Vedas. Through various anecdotes and instances the prowess of these two factions are signified as causing bondage into the noose of shakti and emancipation from the bondage. In this manner maternal aspect, guileless virgin aspect is depicted elsewhere in Rigveda only. In Surya devi suktam shakti has been mentioned as the consort. In ambhrini suktam as well as the appendix portion of the Rigveda she has been felicitated as the primordial power of consciousness. Agni Rahasya Kanda of the Yajurveda contains a description of shakti in the meters pertaining to the laying of the bricks for sacrificial pyre .

In Devi suktam, this primordial shakti comes to be conceptualised as the cow of gain Kamadhenu . She alone manifests in variegated forms like a cow with four tits in her udder. As a newly betrothed bride of the sun she accounts for the creation of a new universe comprising sentient and insentient entities along with all four, Categories of living entities स्वेदज, अंडज, उद्भिज, जरायुज . (viz born from sweat ,dung etc, born from eggs, born from earth ,born as wrapped in placenta creatures which emerge upwards from the earth)

Kathopanishad defines Aditi as a divine entity bereft of all duality. This Aditi springs forth from प्राण the vital air and enters the Vijnana Namaya cavern in the conscious ether called चिदंबरम्. From her mystic abode she manifests as variegated forms of the universal phenomena. In the Atharv Veda and Taittiriya Aranyaka the adorable manifestation of the divine mother as Tripurasundari has been depicted. In canonical scriptures called Brahmana and Aranyaka the pure aspects of Shaktis of Tripurasundari are described as Gayatri, Saraswati and Savitri. The idea behind naming her as Gayatri is that she describes the nature of pure Brahman through singing thus protecting aspirants and devotees. The spiritual effulgence of Gayatri is called Bharga. From this effulgence the entire universe is created sustained and finally dissolves into it: which is why the divine shakti Gayatri is also named as Tejomayi brilliance and Bharga Mayi or effulgence. Since she is the agency of procreation of the universe, she is called Savitri,

She is also the source of the spring of divine ambrosia of the absolute brahman. The cascade of bliss flows from her therefore she is also called as Saraswati. As the prowess of absolute Brahma she is called blissful, vital and manifests as spirit and therefore existence consciousness and सच्चिदानंदमयी. It has been propounded in all Upanishads that the primordial shakti पराभट्टारिका the great celestial empress, who is continuously pervasive, comprises the universal phenomena of thirty-six tatwas (elementary constituents). She is known as Tripura by the exponents of spiritual lineage.

Etymology and derivation of the word Tripura

This word Tripura has been defined in various ways by the compilers of mystic canons owing to its etymology and lexicographic derivations:

- 1 She is called Tripura owing to her being a priori of the three Bindus and tatwas (I.e. the fire, the sun and the moon. Atma ,vidya and shiva)
- 2 Being synonymous to अ ,ह and ई which denote the superego and Kamakala, she is the origin of all Sanskrit alphabet
- 3 Owing to her virtue of being the power of action knowledge and will
- 4 She is Tripura because she is the personification of the three Shaktis,
- 5 She in her subtle form manifests as the three chakras
- 6 She manifests as the three abodes of waking, dream and sleep
- 7 Since she is dormant in the three seed syllables also called tritari
- 8 The three tatwas which are her manifestation-are different from those listed in the first category are presumably Pati the lord, pash noose and pashu the Bound soul
- 9 The three gunas viz sattva Rajas and tamas are her forms so she is Tripura
- 10 Since she dwells within the mystic triangle
- 11 She abides in the three peethas or plexuses viz kamagiri, purngiri, and oddiyan which are there in the microcosm as well as macrocosm..
- 12 Six adhwas are also categorised as three adhwas each pertaining to prakasha and vimarsha . Therefore she is called Tripura
- 13 Since she pervades these three lingas (bana chal and itar) and matrikas vowels consonants and semivowels
- 14 The creatrix of the three modes of speech vama jyeshtha and raudri
- 15 Being a priori to the three puras vama etc .
- 16 Being a mother to the three towns of vama jyeshtha and raudri
- 17 A priori of puraskar or abodes like vama etc.
- 18 Bearing the three characteristics of existence consciousness and bliss
- 19 Since she pervades all three category of beings
- 20 Since she is sought after and is adored by yogins i.e. Jñāna yoga, Bhakti yoga and karma yoga she is called

Tripura

- 21 She precedes the trinity of gods viz Brahma Vishnu and shiva therefore she is called Tripura .
 - 22 Owing to her being the three nadis viz Ida pingala and Susumna
 - 23 She dwells in the three abodes I.e. mind reason and ego
 - 24 The trio of bindu, matra, vyahritis, three modes of speech,the three seed syllables,the three kutas,three Vedas, three lokas,three disc dents ,three gurus and three categories of gurus .
- त्रिमूर्तिसर्गाच्च पुराभवत्वात् त्रयीमयत्वाच्च पुरैवदेव्याः लयेत्रिलोक्या अपि पूरकत्वात् प्रायोम्बिकायास्त्रिपुरेति नाम। [prapancha sara]
- The most frequent name of the divine mother is Tripura .this is owing to her being a priori of the trinity gods as well. As the creation ,manifesting in the form of the three vedas , because of her being the substratum omnipresence and the ultimate abode of dissolution
[prapanchsara tantra by Adi shankara]

Tripura in the Agamas

Agamas are mystic revelations which pertain to a particular deity or entity. The presiding deity of Kamaraj vidya has been mentioned as Tripurasundari in the following Vedic mantras

He cogitated “He desired,
सो कामयत

सईक्षत

As the absolute Brahma gathers mass through penance,
तपसा चीयतेब्रह्म

These three mantras describe the process of Ikshana or reflection by Brahma or the absolute principle. Paramsiva is consolidation of the power of will. This has been defined as Bindu in the mystic canons , He resolved and then desired सोअकामयता. He cogitated deeply and then desired and after creation with the impetus of knowledge or Jnana - through penance became consolidate and thus prana or the cosmic energy manifested in him. This has been called as the inferior Bindu .This inferior bindu has been called Shabd Brahm or the absolute principle manifest as the “word”. After dividing the prana, the creator commenced with creation of the universe from the fifteen digits or Kalas. Thus occupied paramashiva is said to associate with kriya shakti or the power of action. This shakti generates shraddha or devotion in the entities which are to be created. In this manner she manifests as means of enjoyment for the enjoyer within the phenomena comprising five elements viz ether, air, fire, water and earth causes extroversion of the mind and produces the fruits of good or bad karmas in the form of pleasure and pain. This aspect of kriya shakti is called nada नाद

In the Shri suktam and tripur upanisad of Atharva Veda the par Bindu परबिंदु, apar bindu अपरबिंदु and the trio of Bindu, beeja and nada बिंदु बीज नाद are described as the Tripura or trupurdham lit. the triple township. This is represented by the triangular seat of the supreme goddess tripursundari and comprises the sentience portion or Bindu, insentient portion or beejam and chidachidamsha or an admixture of insentient and sentient i.e. nada.

Thus the term Tripura is derived through various etymologies in various tantric canons. This word signifies homogeneity or unison of Shiva and Shakti which in turn is unfragmented and formless.

Shaiv agamas and tripura agamas

Out of myriad scriptures pertaining to the cult of shrividya the following is considered as the main scripture propounding the cult of shri vidya, shaiva agamas and tripura agamas. This has been unequivocally accepted by all scholars and aspirants of this cult.

Just as all strands of a fishing net (called vagura in sanskrit) are contained in the main ring (mool valaya) all mantras converge into shri vidya. This principle knot that binds together nigama or the vedas and agamas or the tantra is what is known as vidya . Bhaskar raya in his commentary asserts that the term vagura pertains only to a fishnet despite the ambiguity as a trap for catching deers. This is because a fishnet is fastened along a ring and the expanse converges into the circle of the ring .

Tripura as emanating from the revelations

We have already propounded the reconciliation between nigamas and agamas still it will not be out of place to reflect on this from the perspective of the vedas. By perspective we mean the analysis of facts, elements and ideas propounded in the revelations. It is well known that there are four vedas besides the four portions of the vedas viz mantra, brahman, aranyaka and upanisad taken together can also be called as the four Vedas. All topics described in brief in these four portions of the vedas, their details of pronunciation, methodology and expositions are found in the agamas in an unalloyed form. There are three paths mentioned in the agamas – unsupported, supported and mixed. In the tripuragamas there are the three corresponding paths namely samayachara – dextro, kaulachara -levo. Misrachara or mixed path. Samayachara has several meanings in samayachara or dexterous path itself.

1 Equilibrium,

2 the time span before the rotation of awareness in various chakras in the ‘‘daharakash’’ or the space within one's heart while performing antarpooja or subtle worship.

3 the subtle most path,

4 the adoration of shiva and shakti unison so on and so forth .all these signify samayachara or the dexterous – path.

The worshipers of gross shri chakra have it moulded in gold etc and worship while meditating upon the unison of mantra, yantra ,guru and the goddess. This process is called kaula chara . In the mixed path both i.e. exterior worship and internal worship called bhavana are carried out simultaneously.

Hence the cult of shri vidya is propounded in the vedas and the worship of Shrividya is a meditation upon the power of the universal self or Brahm vidya within one self as one mystic principle.

Meditation and Brain waves

Bhoomi Sati

Meditation has emerged as a potent tool for enhancing mental health, especially in today's fast-paced world. It reduces stress, and develops self-awareness.

According to studies, the longer you meditate, the better; the more you meditate, the more your brain waves shift. There are also several alterations in brain activity which are caused by meditation, way beyond its well known advantages. This may be detected by specific patterns of electrical signals called brainwaves. Alpha, beta, gamma, theta, and delta brainwaves all correlate to distinct states of consciousness, ranging from intense awareness to profound relaxation. Gaining knowledge about how meditation affects these brainwave patterns offers intriguing new perspectives on the brain processes that underlie its transformational benefits.

This article examines the relationship between brainwave activity and meditation, revealing how the practice facilitates our ability to shift between various mental states, such as transcendence, profound contemplation, and peaceful focus. Different frequency bands that correspond to distinct mental states and cognitive processes are used to classify brainwaves. The slowest brainwaves, known as delta waves (0.5–4 Hz), are mainly associated with unconsciousness and deep sleep. They are essential for immune system control, physical healing, and restorative processes. Excessive delta activity while awake could be a sign of brain malfunction or injury. The slightly quicker theta waves (4–8 Hz) are produced during periods of deep relaxation, light sleep, and creativity. Though too much theta activity might lead to daydreaming or distractibility, these waves frequently occur during REM sleep and contemplative experiences, encouraging creativity, intuition, and memory consolidation.

Moderate and rhythmic, alpha waves (8–12 Hz) are linked to a relaxed and attentive mental state. When the brain is calm but concentrated, as it is during silent meditation, they take over. For mental clarity and stress reduction, alpha activity is crucial. Faster beta waves (12–30 Hz) are associated with increased alertness, problem-solving skills, and active thinking. They are essential for cognitive engagement and decision-making, and they predominate during tasks requiring concentration. But too much beta activity can cause tension or anxiety. Finally, the fastest waves are gamma waves (30–100 Hz), which are linked to elevated consciousness, learning, and perception. It is thought that gamma waves combine data from various parts of the brain to enable sophisticated thought processes and insights.

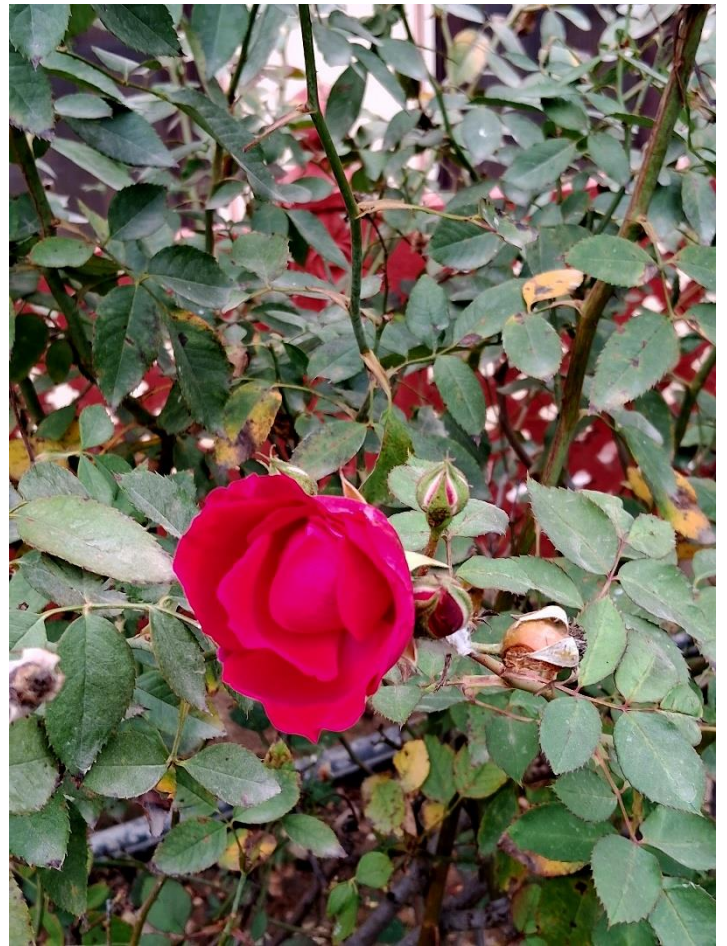

Brainwave activity is significantly impacted by meditation, which encourages changes in frequency patterns that correlate to focused attention, relaxation, and altered states of consciousness. Depending on the kind and intensity of the practice, the dominance of specific brainwaves might alter throughout meditation, improving mental and emotional health. Alpha waves (8–12 Hz) usually rise within the first few minutes of meditation, indicating a relaxed and attentive state of focus. This change is linked to a calm but active mind, less stress, and improved mental clarity. Theta waves (4–8 Hz) frequently become more noticeable as meditation gets deeper. These slower waves facilitate a contemplative state when one may feel disconnected from outside influences and are associated with creativity, introspection, and access to the subconscious mind. Delta waves (0.5–4 Hz) might appear during deep periods of silence or in certain advanced meditation techniques. These waves, which are typically linked to deep sleep, signify a very healing and restorative stage of meditation that encourages recovery and renewal. Increased gamma wave activity (30–100 Hz) is occasionally seen in seasoned meditators, which is indicative of heightened awareness, intense concentration, and epiphanies or transcendence.

During meditation, beta waves (12–30 Hz), which are generally associated with active thought and problem-solving, tend to diminish. This decrease suggests a change to a more relaxed, focused mindset from the hypervigilant, tense condition of regular thought patterns. The well-established advantages of meditation, including stress reduction, emotional control, enhanced attention, and increased self-awareness, are attributed to the balance of these brainwaves during the practice.

In conclusion, meditation balances brainwave activity by lowering excessive beta activity and increasing alpha, theta, delta, and occasionally gamma waves. The ability of meditation to improve mental states and general well-being is highlighted by this neurophysiological change.

The science of Shakti 7th

TRANSITION FROM BHUMIKA GAMANAM TO ANTAVASTHA .

The gyration and quivering is in fact the shredding of Pashas along with impurities accumulated through many lives. This is akin to the intoxication caused by liquor except that in this case it is caused by the elixir of immortality (Amrita). In Zen Buddhism this is called the state of ‘bursting the bag of logic’.

<https://www.astaguru.com/auctions/2022/historic%20masterpieces-101086/bindu-107881>

Suprarational orientation of an aspirant’s mindset is often mistaken for some mental instability. One adept named Sadashiv Brahmendra was reported to have gone mad to his guru. Familiar with the mindset of his pupil the guru said

उन्मत्तता हंत न मे तादृशीति।

Even I do not have madness like his.

Roman Roland has written somewhere that had Ramkrishna paramhansa existed in the west he would have been put into an asylum.

The aspirant of Shakti upon reaching the state of chakravishranti shreds the condition of physical spiritual and intellectual limitations which to an uninitiated or dillitante is akin to mental instability but in fact amounts to his passage into an entirely different realm, where he may or may not be able to communicate with the grosser phenomena cognitively.

The three impurities of finitude, persuasion of duality or multiplicity and adherence to impressions of vicious and virtuous nature are the three taints which has been coercing an empirical soul since antiquity. They are in fact the cause behind its being finite and empirical, so their concomitant termination by the dawning of the spiritual energy is exhibited through various apparently behavioural peculiarities. This phenomenon is described by Somanand Nath as the symptom of redemption by the munificence of the primordial Shakti. According to hath yoga pradeepika a treatise dealing with the grosser aspect of Shakti cult -this happens when the pran enters a wrong passage or nadi specially when one tries breath control arbitrarily I.e. without a guru’s supervision. Somanand Nath speaks highly of this blessed state of divine ecstasy the one we are studying must be different from the madness caused by entering of the prana into some wrong passage . An aspirant of shaktivijnana is also necessarily an ardent devotee of paramba in the form of kundalini. There is no chance of her being lead to some wrong passage . In the prequel we have described how the threshold of corporal and subtle realms is crossed by mystics, shamans and mediums for predictions or divination.

Transition from bhumikagamanam [reaching a state] to antavastha [seat in the innermost] is as subtle as it is ecstatic. The bliss in this buffer state is described by the author in a very aesthetic manner. This transition follows by horripilations and welling of tears in the eyes, yawning, exhirilathon, inability to speak, severing of the inner knot, divine touch, and excessive joy due to the spasmodic rapture of Bindu accrue from the naval plexus.

Need less to say that this experience is not merely narrative and meant for alluring as it were the aspirants into the cult, but based on the first hand experience of the adepts in those respective psychic centers which have to be experienced first by the aspirant and tallied with the account given in mystic canons. This arcane cult is not the propagation of dialectics or dictum through the lineage but that of very subtle spiritual experience .

To be contd.

Self portraiture (Self is the Other even in our Body)

When we enter into a phase building up our personality, we are generally dealing with the word 'persona'. Persona is considered as mask to deal with beingness of individuality confronting this phase. Earlier I was questioning this state while observing the role element. It is here the notion of 'being' and 'becoming' comes into frame. For example – being an 'individual' versus becoming a 'personality'. Here, I can see an attempt to enter into Otherness. Self confronting the Other. For instance, even it can be that some nation's strategy to convince the citizens to reconsider their individual status through the Otherness aspect; here self becomes the Other. This is so evident when individuals confront each other. Putting an emphasis on personality frame, they exhibit profoundly the specific 'Other' and appear to each other as An-Other. Also the perception of the people while looking at this portrait which gets into the point of personifying me aims towards the becoming aspect. Appearance is always met with questionable glance when one appears and faces the other, technically bouncing back to oneself like a pendulum. Very often my looks have been like a puzzle for the onlookers.

Most often dealing with the juggling effect of identity, although I don't fall into a role yet the general tendency of the people is to categorize me in the juncture of becoming though in actual sense they are facing my being. If I now bring a specific example here – one of the viewers after looking at this very self portrait addressed me that I look like a rebel, actually a Maoist rebel. It is evident here that an individual's eye becomes an instrument to transfer information to the brain. This is where the appearance deceives when the actual 'me' is somewhat and somehow, confronting them. To some I look like someone from South America, a Mexican, or sometimes I am even compared to a Brazilian or Lapland people due to my countenance.

Self-Portrait in Pyrography

In a way this constant assumption of identity makes me explore the specific Other in a more questionable form. Rest assured self portraiture then turned out more important to me dealing with it in frequent time and space. Coming back to the question of self and the Other, self portraiture allows one to look into numerous aspects, questions and doubts. This practice is not only about colour, tones, hues, styles, feature; but also one can discover many levels even by tincturing the philosophical discourse. However, here I feel lot of pondering evolves and opens up, when we can actually discard the references that has already been tampered forming into bibliographical approach. It is therefore such a reason why self portraiture helps in studying the self as a 'self' or even as the 'Other'. A narcissist way of doing or studying is conditional which doesn't apply much information to the creative expressionists; there is always something more than what is generalized, what is perceived. There is always a question to be answered, an answer to be questioned.

For some practitioners self portraiture is like examining various techniques, even I had the privilege to explore on that ground. In recent times my exploration is not thoroughly lingering in aesthetic value of portraying, but more in the line and margin of a value concerned with the livingness associated with the present. To me self portraiture reveals the time and space range adjoining an experienceable notion. The journey of self in the Otherness of a body frame has innumerable remnants to go through, which concerns the bygone days, present-recentness and absent-tomorrow. It brings forth the issues that are uncertain, issues that are existing and issues that one has to deal with in this huge maze of a complex mechanical world. We and I represent the existing inhabitant in the presence of beingness. This beingness can be like a make-shift semantic or it can be stagnant in the situational remedies of the world, which thrusts individuals into the becoming phenomena. What I create here is a picture or in other words I bring out a picture in the open and in this very ground this self portraiture can also relate to thinking of the Other. The Other which becomes The An-Other, perambulating in the pendulumic manner so as to consider in anyone's viewpoint.

This question of the Other has and had been an important card for the philosopher's and psychoanalysts' desk appearing as a synthesis of critical thinkers. On the other hand to live and breath as the Other is somehow more in the realm of reality. Self portraiture is however, just a representation when the ground is different, as this paper presents so. A specific pictographic description to count and evaluate, rather than merely observing the resemblance of the feature presented here. The other is potentially triggering the self and self in return potentially resonating on the realm of the Other. Self Portraiture is not only a way to be a narcissist but also to examine, excavate and question the identity. Identity is not only a sovereign subject practiced by the evidence-mongers, but also to refer to the paradigm of 'Being' and 'Becoming'.

Self is also the Other in our body. Normal mirror image cultivate in this query when one craves to inquire in one's domestic practice. The otherness also tampers and tickles the role that one wants to adopt. Questions of belongingness, the time and space aspects that points to durational stand always tincture the Other. The stretch from Other to the space of An-Other is peremptorily evident and one can bring this to problematize.

Feature of self analyzing is very evident with constant examination in the velocity of time range. My effort is concentrated more in this juncture, choosing on my personal ground the paradox and metaphor of self and the Other. But all these are explored with the challenges that are already existing. I remember how my visage through a transitional phase went through considerable changes, taking note of the choice and chance syndrome seen in this plane of existence. Make-shiftiness is present not as choice but it is conditioned by the events and situation that tincture the 'Other-hood'. I try to test and reflect this issue through bodily writing and self portraiture. Refined and civilized ancient culture and animistic cultures have examined this notion by living it. Constant dribbling was done by examining the enigma of Self and the Other through sacred and secular rituals, rites of passage, processing of divinations and practices.

These cultural people anticipated the Other by representing in symbolic gesture the concept of past existence, rebirth and re-incarnations. Or in another word they attempted to diminish the visible and invisible margin that exist between Self and the Other. In the present age the Otherness enters and faces the notion of An-Other. Here through self portraiture, some kind of attempt is singled out by these juggling of terms – a visual kind which don't necessarily require textual curtain being translucent yet being strong in expression. A visual kind in which one can also look through mind's eye, one can travel deeper to perceive and conceive, to encode and decode and to opine whatever sense of energy one can find. But at the end this visual kind performs with symbolic correspondence to the viewer's domain of denomination. The real 'me' is always there whether the looks may change, whether the attire changes ; the visage and the body is always there as a container, as a filter to all that we can face.

Are we actually generalizing while we hold discussion or are we making any point in any which way? For me questioning the self as the Other is an important way to release the generalization. Each portrait that I have done goes into this phase of time and space phenomenon, examining the all round phenomenal changes, going through the remnants, going through the present and going through the ineffable inevitable future anon.

Ishwar Pratibhijna Karika

PRATYABHIJNA MADE EASY.

ISHWAR PRATYABHIJNA KARIKA 13

Even with divergence of objectivity a man of enlightenment is always seated in his essential nature but what is the difference in the experience of objective phenomena of bound empirical soul's and an emancipated one .

The world view of an enlightened being is the same as that of Maheshwar who perceives the entire objectivity as a projection of his essential nature or as not different from himself.

मेयंसाधारणमुक्तःस्वात्माभेदेनमन्यते

महेश्वरोयथाबद्धःपुनरत्यंतभेदवत् 13 .

An emancipated soul experiences the entire objective phenomena as not different from him as the great lord does .a bound soul on the other hand sees it as entirely different from himself .

Beginning from the state of shiva upto the level of a worm are experienced as his very soul by an emancipated being ,thus I am also the experiencer of the entire universe ,and vice verse . I am also experienced by the universe . All this objectivity is my part only ,same in the case of other objects of experience. In this way objective phenomena with respect to one another and as related to the subjective awareness is not differentiated from the subjective consciousness . Hence the element of complete homogeneous ,non dual substratum attains the state of vimarsha or universal vimarsha i.e. I am all. On the other hand in the case of a bound soul all this is just the opposite . A bounded soul rests only in the experience of difference .

The world view of an emancipated soul is same as that of maheshwara

Yes

No

Can't say

A perfect being experiences the entire objectivity as his manifestation and a pashu doesn't false

True

Can't say

Sharing the world view of the perfect being or as we have learnt in the preceding Karikas the experience of his becoming "everything" is hard to explain dialectically. The pure subjective awareness of one's conscious nature unalloyed by any trace of objectivity comes from the intuitive insight into one's essential nature and not by merely comprehending their postulations intellectually. The experience depicted in the previous karikas pertains to the state of divergence of awareness as a posteriori of one's identification with shiva. Such an enlightened soul if gets divergent he feels as the entire universal phenomena has emerged from him and is not different from his essential nature . His experience is depicted as "even as there is divergent expansion of Vikalpa or ideations in the form of the universal phenomena . This divergence doesn't belittle him and his spiritual magnanimity as maheshwara or the great lord . It is not like a conventional yogi who would be seated in his essential nature when he has stopped all fluctuations of the mind matter -चित्तवृत्तिः but would be in unison with vrittis when he arises from his trance of union with his essential nature An adept of this school of pratyabhijna remains the same whether absorbed in samadhi or divergently dynamic .

The awareness switching between the Ishwar and Sadashiv states has been discussed here. The Flow of consciousness in Ishwara is divergent and in Sadashiv it is convergent .

ईश्वरो बहिरुन्मेषीः निमेषोन्तः सदाशिवः

The lord and thus a mahayogi coming down to the state of sadashiva remains absorbed in his essential nature owing to minimised objectivity . In Ishwara 's state of divergence there is an experience unison with the entire phenomena and the great adept shares the viewpoint of Parameshwara – it is all my very grandeur !

सर्वममायं विभवः। To be cntd.

YTA YOGTANTRAGAM CLASSROOM

A brief insight in the online classes conducted by YTA

In the Yogtantragama Study Circle we read and discuss many arcane texts in the divine guidance of our Guru Maharaj Swami Paranand Tirth ji. Swamiji reads and explains the metaphysical import of these texts along with conventional commentaries.

Currently we are studying Chidgagan Chandrika attributed to Kalidasa with the commentary Kramaprakasika by Pt. Raghunatha Misra and Brahma Sutra Bhashya of Srikanthacharya with the commentary Shivarkamani Dipika by Appaya Dikshita. While the former text is a poetic eulogy of Paramaba and subtly hints at her more esoteric practices, the latter one is a Saivite insight into the Brahma Sutras.

In last few months we have completed the study of Nityasodasikarnava with two commentaries Rjuvimarsini by Sivananda and Artharatnavali by Vidyananda and Prapanchsara Tantra. Though the classes are in sanskrit with a little patience and self study one can immensely benefit from them. Anyone interested to join us may please request Swamiji for the link.

Mother O Mother!

Rashneek Kher

In Colors dark and in bright, Infinitesimal and Infinite
All we see is your light- Mother O Mother

In the roar of lion is thy, as in feeble baby's cry
The four I toddled and the wings to fly - Mother O Mother

Mother I suckle at your breast, you our sky and our nest
Bliss your smile, Ain't I blest - Mother O Mother

In you exists the galaxy, the many earths and the deep sea
Outside you what is me, If not you then who is thee- Mother O Mother

In the darker realms of me, resides a fear of losing thee
Crush my fear and set me free- Mother O Mother

When we sing songs of joy, all in abandon and glee
Tears well up, we feel you deeply-Mother O Mother

In small joys and great festivals, the incandescence yet solemnly
Presides you, Oh my deity, In prayers and in gaiety -Mother O Mother

On mountain tops , in flowing streams, in lands barren and fertile dreams
Blood in veins and arteries, the conscious soul that gleams- Mother O Mother

You the kinetic and the potential, the real and the ephemeral
Bristling bazars and moving cars, the living cities and the spiritual- Mother O Mother

In my native they would often say, she pays heed to even the wanton ones Merciful O Mother, pardon my sins, I am but one of your sons- Mother O Mother

Burning (Kimiya)

Burning Burning Reach for the Gold Ambika Talwar

Oh Ma. She is a burning. Indeed. She is a burning and I feel it so far away Tortoise is plowing the under field and moving moving moving onward.

Tonight is the full moon in mesha but this crescent hides part of her skirt to show a tooth with a diamond.

See the squiggles reaching for the gold – I was told.
What is the answer to the riddle?
If there is one
Not answer. But the riddle. Is there one?

See moon rests cradled on a tree top dropping apples and pears while all the while on earth and beneath her skins wild dance of drumming never stops.

Climb the ladder with me She says race me to the stars. Leave the tortoise to its ploys – gently plowing through fields of minerals of trillion hues that make her shine.

Listen to the whispers below while above the vespers ring new bells.
Listen to the heart of things. Not the tale
There is no end to glimmer of moon when it shines through earth, mirrors, our faces.
Look at me looking at you, Oh Ma...!
