Rectifying Prelest, imagery and ideation

Maheshwar Abhinav Gupta describes the process of condensation of vimarsha or the pure self evident consciousness into Vikalpa or ideations .

Vimarsha unites with nescience and condenses in the form of Vikalpas in pashyanti state of expansion of expression . Vikalpa leads to the reciprocation of objectivity . Reversing this course has been suggested as the means to attain the spiritual power *which in turn leads to the absorption of the entire objectivity into the essential nature . विकल्प क्षयः cessation of ideations and विकल्प संस्कार rectification are not two different practices . Thought dispersal and elongating the span of thoughtlessness between two consequent thought constructs are the most common tactics of Vikalpa Kshaya . Focus on Unmesh उन्मेष, which is the origin of a consequent thought constructs after the preceding one has subsided . The origin and the end of prana interlaced with awareness ,beginning from heart and extending upto the region above the crown of the head is yet another upaya.

There are hundred odd upayas in the agamas so much to choose from but one must attain the transcendental experience apriori. Upayas do not generate anything new, rather they are means to restore the essential nature . There is a parallel of Vikalpa or viparyaya in Christian mysticism called prelest . This is presumably a Greek or Russian word usually related to false hood . The antidote given in the arcane books is prayer and fasting . Any verbal ideation devoid of substantiality is Vikalpa where as an illusory perception based on aberrant falsehood is viparyay . Both may be surpassed by prayer and penance but one has to be too credulous and for that agamas suggest a specific discipline focusing on severing of the noose of falsehood and purging of the taints which cause the conditioning . Conditioning with its produces is falsehood per se . The resolution and commitment part of it comes from prayer and penance hence the prayer like “ Lead me from falsehood to truth , from darkness to light and death to immortality” are also answered but in the form of adherence to upayas or spiritual knacks which reinforce an aspirant’s will and lead him across falsehood to his essential nature -the absolute truth. Gods as an ancient adage goes -do not protect a man with a cudgel in their hands but they inspire his cognitive process and direct him out of fear!

Acquiring spiritual power or a feeling of such an acquirement can be thoroughly corrupting like all other power dynamics. Masters all around the world have warned the aspirants about the dangers of going astray and losing the sight of the real goal. On the path of spirituality if humility is lost, everything is lost! That is precisely why ascetic Pasupata adepts were advised to court dishonour and behave in a way that people would not only ridicule them but also shun them as mad men. Now such ideas are not only seen in ascetic cults of India but has a parallel almost everywhere. ‘

Prelest, a concept from Eastern Orthodox Christianity refers to a spiritual delusion or deception usually with a false sense of spiritual superiority. It stems from pride and vanity arising due to lack of self awareness. Christian saints have suggested prayer and fasting as two important means to cleanse the soul and realize the ultimate truth. In the Agamic tradition the method for countering prelest is by taking resort at the divine feet of the Mother Goddess and praying to her to make us realize the divine play. While self denial, fasting etc are means to realize the nature of self, the method proposed by Agamas is more life affirming one, propounded by stalwarts like Abhinavaguptacharya, which focus on experiencing everything without getting attached.

Here one is reminded of Friedrich Schiller who was disillusioned by the way French revolution degenerated in the hands of so called saviours of France. In his words, “A great movement has found small people”. On analyzing he realized the reason for such a downfall was the individual greed, revenge and personal gain. Schiller observes that because of lack of play drive which balances the formal and sensual drive people who initially had a common cause went astray. Play drive makes us realize the temporiness of everything, This makes people participate in the play whole heartedly, honestly and completely engrossed without getting attached. Such an attitude is must for any real revolution, be it a political or a spiritual one!

Explaining the notion we begin with the insightful editorial by our Guru Maharaj, Swami Paranand Tirth ji on the importance of upayas (spiritual knacks) along with prayer and meditation in the Agamas. Swamiji stresses that resorting to upayas, “reinforce an aspirant’s will and lead him across falsehood to his essential nature -the absolute truth.”

Next we have translation and exposition of 3rd verse of ‘Mahakal Stotram’, The verse explains the significance of realizing the absolute principle as beyond existence and in-existence and in the process realize one’s essential nature. Following this we have an academic write-up by Bhoomi Sati on ‘Extrasensory Perception’, a field between Parapsychology and Psychology. This is followed by a brief write-up on ‘The Science of Shakti by Varni Paratpar Swarup quoting the verses from ‘Shakti Vijnana’ and their detailed exposition.

The ponderings of Suva, an Indian artist based in Finland titled ‘Pyrographies’ along with creative philosophical excerpts from his blog provide an interesting and engaging insight in the playful yet sensitive mind of an artist, thinker and a seeker.

In this issue we present a Photo Essay on the recent YTA Colloquium on Agama Shastra held on 15th April 2025 at Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri National Sanskrit University. Next up there is translation and exposition on 14th Karika from Ishwar Pratibhijna Karika by Utpaladeva from the YTA study circle. A brief insight into the online classes conducted by YTA is next which is followed by two mystic poems by Rashneek Kher and Ambika Talwar titled ‘Ecstasy of Bliss’ and ‘Flutes of Cedar’ respectively. While the former seeks to unravel the mystic journey the latter is a deep cry of the soul for ultimate union.

A hymn to Buddhist Mahakal -the god of terror and fury

MAHAKALA STOTRAM

Mahakal the deity of wrath and fury part 3

भावाभावपरिच्छिन्नं जगत्संबोधकारकम्।
सर्वभावात्मकं नाथं जगन्नाथ नमोऽस्तु ते॥ ३॥

O! lord of the universe obeisance to you who is in unison with all beings and pervades existence as well as in-existence .You are the agency of enlightening the entire world.

In the monastic canons the absolute principle has been depicted as beyond existence and in-existence .Syllogistic thought however refutes this and asserts that an entity can either be existent or inexistent but not both owing to their being conflicting attributes . In a parlance of supra-rational and transcendental realm

the concomitant transcendence of both is possible, hence the dictum of Gita

“the beginning less and the end less supreme self is neither existent nor inexistent”

A syllogistic view point might interject that there can be no coexisting existence as well as inexistence . It is either existent or inexistent but never the both . The point is not their being there or not being there, but ascertaining relative existence as an entity existent as compared to inexistence . Existence and in existence can not be ascertained from a pure monistic stand point . If they are determined somehow they won't pertain to the absolute monistic principle but to a relative phenomena .

There can be another rendering of the term भावाभावपरिच्छिन्नः . Pure shunyata or the absolute void . The absence of all four variants of absence or अभाव. A priori ,a posteriori absolute absence and absence caused by destruction . All these types of absences are the virtues of Shunyata . To establish the consistency of one's doctrine while refuting others some virtual assertion of the phenomenal reality must be assumed. This intermediation of phenomena before the absolute shunyata is realised has been called as अभूतपरिकल्पः* .

This concept is akin to व्यवहारिक and प्राक्तभाक्िक ित्ता of Vedanta which also falls in with the Buddhist theory as far as the negation of reality is concerned . This conditioned aspect of Mahakala through which he establishes the negation of existence or existence and in existence both , is being felicitated here . Without adopting a trace of existence I.e. Abhutparrikalpa mahakal cannot enlighten aspirants about essence less ness .

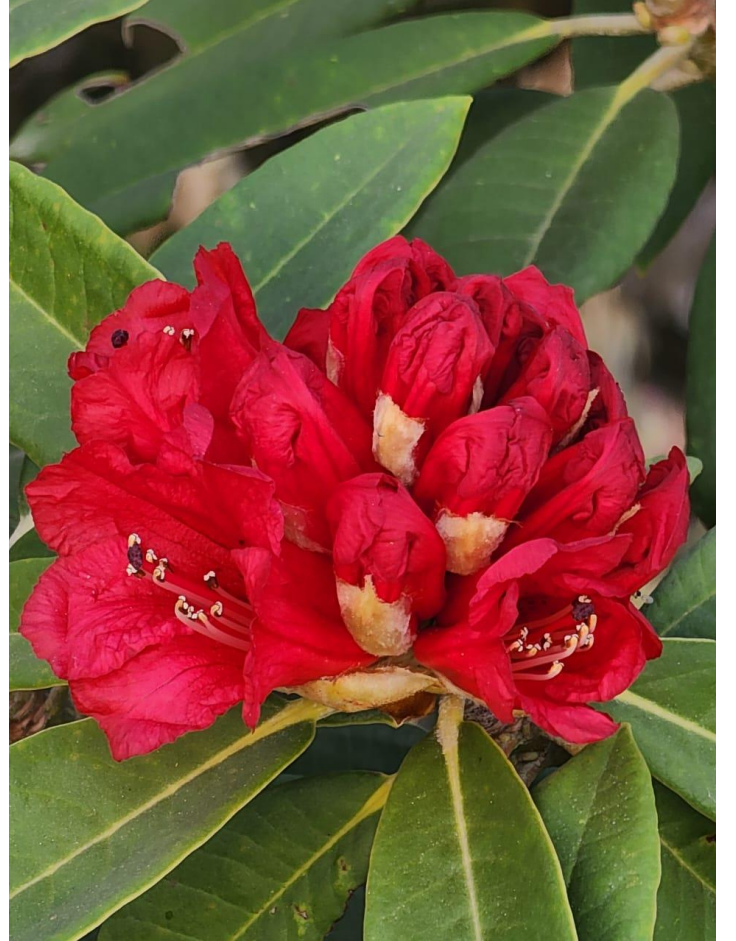

Sarvbhavatmakam apparently sounds like all pervasive but according to madhyamak thought this sarv bhava follows the recognition of shunyata or essence less ness . In vighrahvyavartini mahapandit Nagarjuna says “one who knows shunyata attains everything” Thus by negating self or existence Mahakal attains the state of being everything . Therefore sarv bhavatmaka . The exclamation “O!lord” signifies his ecclesiastical as well as mystic power and authority over the universal phenomena . O! lord of the universe obeisance to you . The honorific Jagannath also indicates the transitory nature of the phenomena since Jagat etymologically means fleeting or momentary . The lord of transitory phenomena is not a permanent or stable substratum but the mode of temporally accepted reality which intimately conduces to absorption into the great void of “essence less ness” .

There are eight intermediate stages of a time fraction which are consistent only if the streamline of consciousness of transitoriness of an empirical soul

(जीवक्षणिकववज्ञानसंतानधारा) merges into that of Ishwar . Awareness of transitoriness of an individual as it dissolves into the streamline of awareness of transitoriness of Ishwara is called nirvana or emancipation .

Ishwar Mahakal or personification of time as a sentient entity . O lord of this ephemeral universe, Jagannath! Obeisance to you .

Extrasensory Perception

Bhoomi Sati

Extrasensory perception (ESP), a field between parapsychology and psychology has been intriguing individuals for a long time.

Extrasensory perception is the theory that human beings are able to sense information outside of the five senses of sight, hearing, touch, taste, and smell. ESP is the supposed ability to obtain information by using senses that are not yet recognized. It includes telepathy (mind-to-mind communication), clairvoyance (perceiving distant events occur), and precognition (knowing before seeing imminent events happen). Even while some people claim to have had personal encounters with ESP, scientific research has not been able to consistently and reliably demonstrate its reality. Researchers in parapsychology have tried to prove ESP through controlled trials, but there are still questions because to methodological constraints, cognitive bias, and chance. This article discusses prior research, contemporary viewpoints, and ongoing discussions over extrasensory perception (ESP), including whether it is a real human talent or a delusion brought on by perception and belief.

J.B. Rhine's first studies (1934) attempted to use controlled card-guessing paradigms to generate scientific proof for ESP. Some have argued that methodological flaws, cognitive biases, and the inability to duplicate such findings contradict ESP, while others have shown statistical evidence for it (Radin, 1997; Bem, 2011) (Hyman, 1985; Wiseman & Milton, 1999). The bulk of ESP-like experiences are caused by cognitive illusions, pattern-seeking behaviours, or misinterpretation of brain activity, according to neuroscientific data currently accessible. In order to ascertain if ESP is a pseudoscience or a significant scientific phenomenon, this article examines previous studies, current experiments, and critical assessments of the phenomenon.

J.B. Rhine's book "Extrasensory Perception" was a historical breakthrough as it was a key point noting the shift from anecdotes of parapsychology to actual experimental parapsychology studies. It led to a lot of debate in the field of parapsychology and how credible its scientific research is. The phrase "extra-sensory perception" was formally created by Rhine to describe the capacity to gather information without the aid of rational deduction or the senses. He grouped precognition, clairvoyance, and telepathy under one heading. The book's main objective was to give the study of psychic occurrences scientific legitimacy. In contrast to previous psychical research, Rhine placed a strong emphasis on statistical testing, quantitative outcomes, and reproducible procedures.

An example of parapsychology in the times of modern psychology research can be given from Bem's 2011 paper. Bem investigated the idea of "retroactive influence," or whether future events could affect people's feelings, ideas, or choices before they really occurred. He investigated whether people could "feel the future," to put it another way. Though his research did face criticisms by future researchers as it failed to replicate. Though it might be relevant as similar to Rhine, Bem studied ESP through controlled laboratory tests, but he also incorporated contemporary statistical and psychological techniques. The study makes a connection between the historical and modern facets of parapsychological investigation. Furthermore, it also draws attention to the conflict between the need for scientific rigour and reproducibility and the belief in unusual occurrences.

Although Bem's experiments reignited interest in the scientific study of ESP, not all researchers account for such effects as evidence of psychic functioning. Cognitive neuroscientist Peter Brugger offers a different perspective, one that accounts for what we may experience as paranormal experiences—like telepathy or precognition—as actually having origins in how the brain typically functions. In his "From Haunted Brain to Haunted Science" (2001), Brugger states that the human brain is a hypersensitive pattern detecting instrument. The brain has a likelihood of finding meaning or associations where there aren't any—a disposition that has been termed as apophenia. This along with heightened activity within certain parts of the brain like the temporal lobes is enough to give rise to deep experiences with a paranormal quality generated from normal neurocognitive function. Rather than dismissing believers as irrational, Brugger is keen to stress that such tendencies are universal and are founded upon the same cognitive processes that allow us to make sense of the world. His work reframes ESP not as evidence of supernatural forces, but as a fascinating by-product of the way we think, feel, and perceive.

While there have been occasional reports that seem to confirm ESP, perhaps the biggest ongoing difficulty in this field has been a failure to replicate those findings on a regular basis. Psychologists Richard Wiseman and Julie Milton (1999) did a critical analysis where they examined many ESP experiments and discovered that experiments that reported positive effects generally could not be replicated with the same level of success. Their paper pointed out that although certain experiments, like those in the Ganzfeld paradigm, initially produced results greater than chance, such effects typically disappeared in later, more controlled replications. Wiseman and Milton argued that this inconsistency undermines the scientific validity of ESP research and implies the possibility that initial findings are the result of methodological flaws, selective reporting, or statistical chance. Their research highlights the essential value of replication as a foundation of scientific evidence—especially when the claims at issue strain the boundaries of what has been commonly believed.

Through all these studies we can see the history of parapsychology and how it progressed into modern psychology. Extrasensory perception still remains a "twilight zone" topic, i.e., it is neither been proven nor fully dismissed. Though this does encourage critical thinking and open-minded skepticism, there's still a long way for this field to go.

The science of Shakti 8th

Chakravisramanam

<https://mapacademy.io/article/neo-tantric-art/> Kerala Museum, Google Arts and Culture

After Bhumika gamanam follows the stage called Chakravisramanam in which the Shakti upon arousal and piercing the abodes of brahma [cardiac plexus] vishnu [glottis] Rudra [pallet] ishwara eyebrows Bindu [forehead] crown of the head, nada, nadant, Shakti, vyapini samana, unmani and right up till anasrit is defined by soma and as “going through various stages” or bhumika gamanam .

This is followed by the process of descend in which Shakti turns into divine ambrosia which first creates all the constituents of subtle body and then drenches them in conventional canon as she rises up to the thousand petal lotus and bites into the eternal full moon elixir and then flows and drenches the entire network of Nadis.

*Arising from thee dismal abyss of muladhara, Bhavani pierces through the six psychic plexuses like a flash of lightning . Thou enters the eternal of eternal ambrosia .

After experiencing the ecstatic fits of gyration quivering ,shaking along with tears ,laughter and other expressions accruing from the shredding of bondages and discarding of impurities the yogi, aided by the munificence of the guru embarks on an internal journey.

The bonded soul is conditioned in the fetters of mistaking himself as finite and insignificant,the reciprocation of experience of duality and a blatant adherence to fallacious notion of vice and virtues.These in the technical verbiage of the Tantra are called anav, mayiya and karmic taints . An empirical soul is astonished as these fetters vanish and the remnants of his impressions of bondage lead him to a psychedelic mind set, culminating into what somananda calls as sporting of the primordial Shakti .

Cosmic Dance by Ambika talwar

Description of the ultimate stage antavastha has been encrypted in one verse

As the transition of Shakti into subtler realms occurs the aspirant exhibits following characteristic

1 horripilation

2 tears

3 yawning

4 stupifaction /stupor

5 introversion of speech

6 severing of the knots

7 ecstatic bliss arising from divine “touch”

8. Oscillation of Bindu from the naval plexus

There need not be the same order since these are the subjective reactions of the awakening of Shakti but merger of speech into the subtle and subtler and subtle most forms and thus severing of knots viz the knot of brahma in vaikhari or gross mode of speech severing of Vishnu’s knot which takes the form of madhyama and rudra’s knot in pashyanti stays same .Para is the state of “no knots” so the awareness in this stage dawns as the self evident gnosis. This is the order of severing of knots in the state of antavastha.

Seventh stage like other stages is sponeneous
‘The excercising of will is not the impetus in this case but on the other hand a person attains unison by the “touch of the power of the universal self”

To be contd.

Pyrography

(Perfo Philo Suva)

The word “Art” for humans is an active vocabulary, which evolves from the domain of expression. A pathway where we juggle between mundane and profane. An outcome of our channel entwined to our subconscious, conscious and supra-conscious conception of our mind, often demonstrated by the labour of our heart. Many theoreticians and critics have already drawn multiple definitions of their perception of art. In our current day to day phase, we have been witnessing how the role of art is transforming, since we are already equipped with the problematics of cultural, political and social mechanism. As well as historically from the assembly of caves to the aristocracy of monumental egoism. The journey of art from it's thought form, spoken form to social form.bouncing back to oneself like a pendulum. Very often my looks have been like a puzzle for the onlookers.

ECLIPSED HEART

By designating ourselves as masters of the crafts and politically constructing the legacy oriented robots, to hold on to the post of supremacy. We invented more to cling towards our own convincing theories, being unsure of the response of discovered vicinities. Right from prehistory; from a mild urge of surviving as the fittest to the industrialized present. We invented rituals of name giving, to brand and label our tents, scattered in numerous climatic zones. The natural geometry of infinity, precisely dwarfed for fitting into the wild-concreteness, being unaware of our fragility of ineffable calamities. We imitated the momentary “Eclipse” of spatial theatrics to demolish this sustained Earth and our maintained Hearts. Our mind galvanized the simple ways of nurturing, with complex means, that which appear in an indefinite eclipse to an end.

Sixty-Four Moves and Within it Multiple-More.

Remnants of browsing through Ancient History of East, India in particular; there was mentioned that a King in order to be capable to rule his reign must be equipped with sixty-four arts of Life and that concerns also beyond. That probably may not strike you, but it struck me, since a chess board has 64 squares. How many present day world leaders have such a quality? And how this game came into being? Is this a symbolic representation of 64 arts, as ancient as this game is known to humankind? I am not a chess player, nor I am interested to make one move within 2 hours waiting time. But I admire people playing it, since strategies of the brain and it's scheming of moves, all these are in action within the thought form of the opponents. Therefore I made all the squares appear different although the tempo of the grid appears repetitive. Sixty-four drawings so to say in a given frame. Each piece symbolically depicts the motion of our "Brain Wave".

This project interested me and so I made it for a friend (Juho) who is deep into chess. Done with pyrography technique (wood burning). I attempted to bring Art and utility together. Thought of putting the details as clear it can be!

It is not so accurate but an assumption that the chess originated in the 6th century AD in Jambudeepa (Peninsula) of the Sub-continent, present day India. The concept traversed through Persia towards the Arab world. Then through Moors towards Europe. So the West came to know about this strategic concept much later. Originally known as Chaturang that translates to four divisions of infantry, cavalry, elephantry and chariotry. Persians changed it into Shah which means King. The Arabs named it as Shatranj. The Spanish named it as axedrex; to Portuguese it became xadrez and in Greece it became zatrikion. Likewise it took manifold names according to the lingual twist around the world. The metaphor that functions with metaphors.

Symbolic Denomination : An Irony (A New Work in Pyrographic technique)

The denomination of symbols as used in emblems of believe system and customs of domestic upbringing also forming as a symbol that manipulates humanity from being humane in nature!

ISHWAR PRATYABHIJNA KARIKA 14

We have discussed that ,in the state of emancipation even while abiding in the realm of sada shiva and Ishwar there is a slight exterior outflux of objectivity then perspective of a bound pashu changes accordingly , the disposition of objective phenomena has been analysed so far, but how could this be consistent in the case of paramshiva ? Who is perpetually absorbed in his essential nature

This has been explained in this consequent Karika

सर्वथात्वंतरालीना अनंततत्त्वोघनिर्भरा

शिवःचिदानंदघनःपरमाक्षरविग्रहः १४

Completely convergent and assimilating in himself the infinite groups of tatwas तत्त्वौघ Shiva is the embodiment of the absolute eternal principle अक्षर who is consolidate consciousness and bliss . Akshara literally means the eternal one who doesn't perish or outlasts dissolution.

There is absolutely no question of the possibility of objectivity or the proportional subjective or objective modes of awareness ,in the great graceful lord shiva . The entire category of the tatwas (essential constituents of the phenomena) is latent and assimilated in shiva as their permanent disposition .

That state owing to its nature of self evident gnosis संवित् , and due to the attributes of innate, natural, spontaneous vimarsha called स्वात्म चमत्कार -Relishing the bliss of self , Shiva becomes homogeneous bliss and due to the incessant blissful nature form manifests as the ultimate अक्षर. Akshara is defined by Utpaldevachary as Anuttara, which along with fifteen other meanings also means parama or the ultimate.

The state of absolute dissolution of all objectivity is described as “all transcending”

सर्वोत्तीर्णा .also termed as vishottirna or world transcendent .There can be three modes of all pervasiveness . Pervading everything by becoming everything as in the previous Karika, or pervasiveness concomitant to transcendence .

There is an adage of an eagle in a tree and above a tree in both cases the bird is beyond the tree so even while pervading the phenomena Shiva is transcendental at the same time .

Sarva is the state of being all , sravatma is being the essential nature of everythingmand sarvottirna is transcending the entire universal a phenomena .

A brief insight in the online classes conducted by YTA

In the Yogtantragama Study Circle we read and discuss many arcane texts in the divine guidance of our Guru Maharaj Swami Paranand Tirth ji. Swamiji reads and explains the metaphysical import of these texts along with conventional commentaries.

Currently we are studying Chidgagan Chandrika attributed to Kalidasa with the commentary Kramaprakasika by Pt. Raghunatha Misra and Brahma Sutra Bhashya of Srikanthacharya with the commentary Shivarkamani Dipika by Appaya Dikshita. While the former text is a poetic eulogy of Paramaba and subtly hints at her more esoteric practices, the latter one is a Saivite insight into the Brahma Sutras.

In last few months we have completed the study of Nityasodasikarnava with two commentaries Rjuvimarsini by Sivananda and Artharatnavali by Vidyananda and Prapanchsara Tantra. Though the classes are in sanskrit with a little patience and self study one can immensely benefit from them. Anyone interested to join us may please request Swamiji for the link.

Ecstasy of Bliss

Rashneek Kher

Knee Deep in water,a tumbler in hand, an acsetic came from the far off land
In the mountain stream,stood like a stone, streaks of light on his forehead shone;

Someone said he is coming to the tavern,
the caves are abuzz of the mystic night
the dance of destiny will tonight begin,
I wonder who will see this be oh not me,oh not me;

His eyes in trance,
what is this dance,
from whence will all other seers come,
who will lead the music through and whose songs will the gods play;

The strings are tugged to the boats destined,
the water ripples and the tones intone,
for the gazers the light from constellations,
on the threads of consciousness;

the mystic rababs on the seers laps,
the wine is ordered and the bar is full,
the bartenders joyful in bliss with no cups in sight,

how shall they serve and to whom;

the revelers are drunk already,
among them many unknown saints and known seers from posterity have they come to see yes, Wahab,Raafia,Mansur and Saadi and then of course there was Shamas Faqir;

Was he one or were they two,
the flute muttered sounds unknown
some said it was Rumi's song,
he was found nowhere though,

In black robes and unkempt hair,
the mad saint had made his way;
Anal Haq Anal Haq was the song,
Far away far away a Zargar sang,

I was born of her and she of me;
the music into trance gave,the trance into ecstasy;
willfully we submitted to thee
,oh my mother do love me,
I shall die of this longing,shall she not bless me.

Flutes of Cedar – Cry of the Soul

~ Ambika Talwar

Initiations

Edge of waters is diffuse – edges they travel from land to land connecting every sand particle back to source – that singular pulse call of the wave – the song of the whale your land, my land, all our lands are songs unique to each the high note the low note the middle notes – all the tides... let us string all these instruments and play them from the cord of origins that calls us home

Even though the dust settles everywhere home mud is still home mud

when it merges in mountains and in our seas
And a singular hum rises in our hearts however far they beat – the longing never recedes nor diminishes

And no one can know what it truly means or tastes like – the tear that wets the eyelids from inside...as if or like the berry that stays on tree top eyes closed taking in the breeze

We can never forget and we must not the timbre of our first naming the cry of the Soul
we will lose everything as we do and we will create with pieces of broken dreams

Loss perhaps is the greatest wisdom
if only it came before the shattering Let us shatter then and make our bowls of chai its spices are always colorful like home

We rediscover what love it is to bless ourselves
Every single day unto the ends of time – how wonderful to know we each is eternal As is our loving for are we not timeless enriched with hum of soil so deep we cannot fathom but we can create – my bare feet wish to walk in mud the ocean is not far...but my thoughts linger by street corners unable to wander there

I seek a home away from dense sky of our times a home where red mountains whisper to me rivers flowing between forest of trees moonlight dress me...to flutes of cedar sound of footsteps coming home.
